OBITUARY

It is our sad duty this week to chronicle the death of Ella Crutchfield, beloved wife of James E. MacLaren on Tuesday afternoon, March 31, the cause of death being pneumonia. The late Mrs. MacLaren was born at Huntingdon, Quebec, and was thirty-three years of age. On February 19, 1908, she was married to her now bereft partner, and it was exactly six years to the day she reached her new home that her spirit winged its flight to Him who gave it. A particularly sad part of the event is the leaving behind of two baby girls, one five years and the other five days old, and who with their mother will share in their grief and sympathy all in their sad and sudden loss. She is also survived by her mother, Mrs. J. Crutchfield, who has been here for some time, three brothers, Harvey and Kenneth, of Mirror ; Willie, and a sister, Mrs. John Neely, of Huntingdon, Quebec. Her father predeceased her eleven months ago. The funeral was held from the home, Hillhurst Farm, west of Mirror on Thursday afternoon, the services being conducted by Rev. J. Upton at the house and at the Methodist Church. During the church services two of the late Mrs. MacLaren's favorite hymns, "The Sunset Gate," and "We're Going Home," were sung by a mixed quartette, viz: Mrs. A. E. and Miss Barton, J. E. Steers and H. E. Stevenson, and "Chopin's" Funeral March was played by Mrs. K. B. Iveson prior to and following the service. Interment was made in St. Monica's cemetery. The pall bearers were R. A. Hopkins, J. H. Duitman, H. E. and H. T. Stevenson, S. Clark and R. T. McCormick.

The subject of this notice was of a quiet and unassuming disposition, and was highly respected by all who had the pleasure of her acquaintance. By her demise a husband and two children lose a loving and affectionate wife and mother, and to them and the surviving members of the family will be extended the heartfelt condolences of innumerable friends.

HER SUITORS

They Wouldn't Be Refused

BY ELEANOR TREADWELL

Miss Margaret Ashton, a young lady of Chicago, was left alone in the world after the death of her father and mother with a brother of two years older. Miss Ashton's brother had died several years before the others; consequently all the family property descended to her. He had let the management of the estate to a young man he had brought up in his business, Edmond Warfield, whom he had chosen because it would be perfectly safe and his daughter would reap the benefit of every cent. Warfield was not only a man of excellent character, distinguished but perfectly honest and honorable. At the time of Mr. Ashton's death Warfield was in his prime, being thirty-five years old.

The Ashtons were of the newly rich. Mr. Ashton's power and the bulk of his wealth in large part had been spent shortly before his death. His daughter had no knowledge of the works of society. There was a need relative to what she could do in her home, and she did not relish living alone. It was natural, therefore, that she should wish to see some one of the world, and who better invited to join party going abroad, she decided to avail herself of the opportunity.

After visiting the principal cities of western Europe Miss Ashton found herself in Rome at the most expensive hotel there. She went to the diplomatic circles of Chicago, but her surroundings had changed. This difference for her did not consist in the vast field of opportunity which she, although fairly educated, a girl of twenty, is not likely to perceive in the literature that has been written to us from abroad. Her name, when Miss Ashton was the collection of persons from all parts of the world she found in the Eternal City. Though she obtained no entree into Roman society, she was shown in with tours of every variety.

EVERY HEAD WAS CRANED FORWARD, BUT NO ONE DARED EYE HER.

Rome, too, has its share of adventures. Whereas in the Americas with his far-reaching golden fields open here to the adventure, and no place is so susceptible of affording plunder for dissolute foreigners as American bottoms.

Miss Ashton could not long remain in one place without attracting the attention of some courtier. She was simplicity itself. When visiting the golden house of Nero and the guide showed her a ruined apartment as the emperor's bedchamber, she stopped to consider that some fifteen centuries had elapsed after Nero's time before the token was introduced into Europe. When she was introduced to Pompeii and the guide showed her certain dishes from which he had eaten, she asked him if he had coffee it did not occur to her that a similar period had elapsed before Europe had begun to enjoy coffee. It was strange that a girl so easily devoted to these matters should put faith in any man who claimed that he had.

Miss Ashton spent a winter in Rome, and when spring came she had received a number of proposals of marriage. These were mostly for the title, for every one descended from an ancient ruler of one of the formerly independent states of Italy. The new United Italy bears the title of prince or princess. Among Miss Ashton's suitors were a prince, an English earl, a German baron and a French marquis.

It was fortunate for Miss Ashton that there were two of the suitors that they believed one another. Had there been but one it is quite possible that by persistence he might have won her. The prince fell into her ear tales of his beautiful home in Sicily where they could dream the happy hours. The earl pictured his castle in Herefordshire, England, with its mottoes; the baron his scabbies in Westphalia, Germany. The marquis spoke eloquently of his chassis on the banks of the Loire that had been the home of kings and had de-sended to him through thirteen generations.

To this nobleman the young lady said that she could not think of marrying into the thirteenth generation, since that was an unlucky number.

Miss Ashton, after her father's death, became the sole owner of the estate. Edmond Warfield as a sort of manager for anything, irrespective of finances, that she could desire himself. He had made all the arrangements for their purpose.

The tragic death of King George of Greece, in the streets of Salonicos recalls a remark his majesty once made to his coming Lord to sit at the hand of King Alfonso, of Spain, recalls the remarkable persistence with which people would be assassins sometimes for years follow a monarch from place to place, seeking opportunity and the opportune time and situation for their purposes.

Edmond had not a word from her since her departure the one day he remained in Rome. I am still tangled up.

Though she did not know it, Warfield had been an object of suspicion to the king. He was a man five years old and used to climb on his lap to listen to stories he would tell him. She will be his wife, the Queen of the who will give him his opportunity for his work.

He was away at the time he received a telegram, and when he arrived he attempted to stab him with a dagger. He was shot at him while he was out drying with his daughter, the Princess.

No fewer than three attempts were made on the life of King George of Spain. On Nov. 17, 1905, just after his accession to the throne, he was a picture representing the general, paying a visit to the hospital department, when he was shot at.

When the throne of France was reoccupied by the Bourbons family, however, Bonaparte, the Emperor Christ and the aides-de-camp into his service. But the king had been employed to make alterations evidently thought it totally unnecessary to have the picture was finished, with our Savoir standing by.

A similar instance of absurdity occurred at Naples, where, in order to represent the king in the picture of the Battle of Abukir, a Neapolitan general who never even set foot upon the island, was paid $1,000 for the unfortunate Marshal Murat.

Was it not a wonder, the picture induced Chella Delia Pueri to paint, the altarpiece in a certain church of Naples, the King of the Annunciation, and is certainly a very curious collection of a rich arm-chair of crimson velvet and gold, with a cat and parrot on a cushion, a chandelier, a great interest in the scene, and on a table a small model of the Annunciation, and is certainly a mystery to his wife and family.

The sequel represents the celebrated British admiral, with the eighteenth century's curtais and sandals. Brightly, in a picture of the Eastern Magi, has portions of the picture removed, showing flowing white surplice with hoods and spurs, and bearing in his hand, as a present to the King, a sword.

Then in another Dutch picture we see Abraham and Lot, with a golden tuba, a great interest in the scene, and on a table a small model of the Annunciation, and is certainly a mystery to his wife and family.

The picture of Sir Clodagh Shovel represents the celebrated British admiral, with the eighteenth century's curtais and sandals.

WASTE IN MUNICIPAL EXPENDITURE

That about one-half of the money expended in the province of Alberta in connection with rural and municipal improvements was wasted was the opinion expressed in Calgary by the Hon. Charles Stewart, minister of public works, in the course of an address on "Municipal Government" delivered at a dinner under the auspices of the Calgary Canada Forward club. Mr. Stewart's remedy for the evil was the establishment of a system whereby men at the head of municipal affairs would be trained for their responsible positions.

It has never been the intention of the government, said Mr. Stewart, to withdraw all support from the rural municipalities. All that the government desires is that the rural municipalities, should assume some larger proportion of the responsibility for the providing of improvements than they have done in the past.

In the older provinces of the Dominion and in the United States they believe as a provincial government that there existed a cumbersome system of government, and personally he felt that in Alberta the system in existence was cumbersome to a certain extent. He was not finding fault with the men who had been at the head of affairs in the rural districts, villages, towns and cities of the province because he was of the opinion that they had acted to the best of their ability. It was his idea that municipal work could be very well carried on by a smaller number of men—say three members who would each have a three years term of office, with one man seeking election each year. They as a government felt that if they were to govern the province economically and cheaply they must not burden the people with expensive systems. It was a fact that the local municipalities of Alberta had been given greater powers than was the case in the east.

Proceeding, Mr. Stewart referred to the subject of single tax, and stated that the years 1914 and 1915 were to prove the true test of whether single tax was to prove a success or not in this province. He had no fear of the result. He believed that after due consideration and experience every man would admit the justice of taxation upon land values.

Continuing Mr. Stewart referred to the amount expended in local improvements in the area between Vegreville and Calgary during the past four years, stating that the amount totalled in the neighbourhood of $4,000,000. He did not believe that they had received value for more than half that sum, and no one had been particularly to blame because all had been doing their best. If that was true of the rural districts, he did not believe they were doing any better in the cities. He was of opinion that their city government had not proved more successful in that respect than their rural government.

The reason was that the man at the head of affairs did not give them their individual attention.

It was not their business. A member of the legislature had to devote a great deal of his time to the conduct of government business in order to become a trained man. He has paid for that purpose, and he spent four years in getting trained. If at the expiry of that time he was not trained then the likelihood was that his connection with the legislature would cease.

On the other hand, a municipal representative was given only one year in which to become trained. He attended about six meetings, and as a rule learned very little. That was true throughout the whole of municipal government. In view of the large sums that were expended annually in municipal government, it was the duty of the inhabitants of the province to agitate for some system that would mitigate to some extent this evil that was growing up in our midst and that had migrated to us. They wanted to devise a system of municipal government that would provide them with men trained for the particular position they were going to occupy.

FAIR PLAY

To THE EDITOR OF THE JOURNAL:

Dear Sir,—Will you kindly publish the following account of the election muddle that residents of L. I. D. 397 have been mixed in against their wishes since New Years, and therefore without regard to representation on our council board. The voters would like to send to form it in their own conclusions as to whether or not it is up to the governing powers to simplify our municipal act a little, so that fair play can be secured with less expense attached and time saved. I will simply name those interested as Messrs. A., B., C., and D., A. is the retiring councillor of 1913 seeking re-election; B. seeks office, and as later shown stops at nothing to get it; C. is nominated by A. to act as returning officer in the coming election.

D. is a brother-in-law of B., and becomes an actor later in the story. The way the matter was worked out was thus: C. the legally appointed returning officer before nomination day retires, and appoints B. to fill his office: On nomination day B. retires and appoints brother-in-law D. as returning officer. D. receives nominations and A., the old councillor is nominated, and B. in opposition to him.

During the time elapsing before election day, meetings are held and voters are canvassed, and there is little doubt that A. will be re-elected by a big majority. Then on polling day, the returning voters that turn up to vote that he will not open the poll, but declares his brother-in-law elected, and sends a return to the government that effect on the following legal technicality, viz.: That the seconder of A.'s nomination was $2.00 in arrears of taxes. You will notice Mr. Editor, that D. constituted himself judge, lawyer, etc., and disfranchised every ratepayer in 12 townships. But also! D. overlooked this fact, the act provides that "on a returning officer resigning his office, his successor shall be appointed by a show of hands of the electors present on nomination day." Therefore from first to last, C. was the only legal officer. C.'s appointment of B. was illegal, and B.'s appointment of brother-in-law was doubly illegal.

Finding ourselves deprived of our votes on election day, the ratepayers present at the polling place tried to persuade B. to resign and have a square election; when the writer looking through the act called his attention to the "illegal returning officer." B. still refused to retire, so a petition signed by 22 ratepayers, showing the illegal proceedings, and requesting fair play and a fresh election, was forwarded to the Hon. Minister of Public Works. In reply A. is informed that "the minister can do nothing, the case must go to court," and A. has to put up $25 in fees as a security. I beseech you for appearing. To be brief. The case was decided on the 12th at Shettler a few minutes back. B. loses, and having to pay all costs from first to last, and the new election petitioned for, ordered.

I would respectfully point out, Mr. Editor, that the case was so palpably illegal, that surely our municipal act could be simplified so that cases of direct steal of an election like this, the Hon. Minister or a Municipal Commissioner could promptly set aside such an election without the delay and costs of a law suit. A small fee could be charged for the service of said commissioner, to be paid by the loser, as he does at present when he loses in court. No act of any government is perfect at first, and a reader can suggest where the act could be made more workin favor of the ratepayers and less with the lawyers with no costs, he will be doing a public service, viz.: Suggest improvements to the powers for our benefit, and that Mr. Editor, has been the aim of the writer in this letter. Not criticism of what some consider good, but pointing out parts of the act that "make fair play" very costly for honest electors, and therefore should be simplified. Thanking you in advance for space accorded.

Respectfully yours,
RATEPAYER.
